Wilson Ennis works on a puzzle of former President Barack Obama during the exhibit.

Beatrice Brown, left, and Sonja Parker look over some of the items at the Black History art exhibit Tuesday at Calvert High School. The exhibit, which was open during the day to students and the general public in the evening, comprises more than 400 pieces. The exhibit will be at Northern High School 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday, Feb. 24.

Wearing a “Busy making my ancestors proud” hooded sweatshirt, event organizer Rhonda Thomas goes over an African American book with Calvert Middle School student Joshua Dugue. Thomas said the exhibit started in 1987 when she started keeping some items that meant something to her.
